Harry's profile optimization rules (and how they apply now)

These rules are now part of how we optimize your account. Rerun the checklist at the end every 2 weeks, and every time you change niche or win a new kind of job.

The 5 rules

#	Rule	How we check it
1	Use tool names from new job posts that you can actually deliver. Put them in your skills, overview and portfolio.	Count tool names in the latest 300–500 job posts in your niche. Add only tools you can really use.
2	Pick a problem posted as a new job every week, by different clients. If it only shows up once a month, it's too narrow.	Count how many new posts per week describe the problem, and check they come from different clients.
3	Pick a recurring problem that US and foreign businesses can't easily solve themselves.	Check the client countries, and that the work needs skill and time they don't have (and repeats every week).
4	Line 1 of the overview says who you help and the result. Line 2 is your best proof: a brand, a number, a review quote or years of experience.	Read your first 2 lines as a client would in search. They must work alone.
5	Describe the responsibility you take on ("manage", "coordinate", "own"), not just the tasks.	The overview says what you're responsible for, not only "I edit, I cut, I caption".

Always: proof must be true. Never use fake numbers, brands or reviews. When you get a real result (views, a client name you may share, a 5★ quote), replace line 2 with it.

Rule 1: tools from new job posts (514 jobs, 1–3 November 2026)

Share of the 391 real editing jobs that name each tool:

Skills change (20 slots): add higgsfield, ElevenLabs and Kling AI. Remove three that repeat others: Video Editing & Production (repeats Video Editing), Video Ad (repeats Short Video Ad) and Social Media Content Creation.

Rules 2 and 3: the recurring problem we picked

> "I record great long-form content every week, but I don't have the time or skill to turn it into a steady stream of short clips that get watched."

Why this problem:

- It appears every week from many different clients. 133 of the 391 editing jobs are about turning long videos (podcasts, talking-head videos, interviews, webinars) into short clips. Over the last 5 days that was 15–43 new posts a day.
- Both US and foreign businesses post it. 71 of those posts are from US clients and 62 from the UK, Canada, Australia, India, Israel and others.
- It repeats. 84 of the 133 want ongoing or weekly work. The typical client wants about 16 clips a month.
- Clients can't easily solve it themselves. It needs editing skill (hooks, captions, pacing), hours every week, and an eye for the best moments. A busy podcaster, coach or founder doesn't have that time.
- It matches your profile: podcast clips, talking-head videos, your podcast portfolio reel, and your monthly packages.

Too narrow (seen less often): real estate reels (2%), gaming clips (2%) and view-based clipping campaigns (3%).

Rules 4 and 5: the new title and overview

Title (63 characters):

> Short-Form Video Editor | Podcast Clips, Reels, TikTok & Shorts

Overview, first 2 lines (what clients see in search):

> Line 1 (who and result): I help podcasters, coaches and founders turn their long videos into a steady weekly batch of Reels, TikToks and YouTube Shorts that people watch to the end.
> Line 2 (best proof): Udemy-certified in Premiere Pro, After Effects and CapCut, I've edited short-form content for a fitness coach, an apparel brand and a church media team. Recent sample: a 42-minute podcast cut into a 17-second reel with a 3-second hook and word-by-word captions.

Responsibility section (manage / own / coordinate):

> I manage your short-form clip pipeline from raw recording to ready-to-post files:
> • I own finding the best moments in every episode or video, so you never have to rewatch your own content
> • I manage a weekly delivery schedule, so you never miss a posting day
> • I build and maintain your brand template (fonts, colours, caption style), so every clip looks like you
> • I coordinate through one shared folder (Google Drive or Dropbox) and Upwork messages, so you approve clips in minutes
> • I keep a simple clip log of what was posted, what performed and what to make next

(The full overview is on Upwork once you approve it.)

Portfolio: tool names and proof (you edit these in Upwork)

Use this for your podcast reel's description:

> Turned a 42-minute two-person finance podcast into a 17-second vertical reel. I found the strongest moment and opened on the punchiest line as a 3-second hook, cut every pause and filler word, reframed 16:9 to 9:16 with the speaker kept centred, added punch-in zooms and word-by-word animated captions, and mixed music and sound effects with the voice normalised to -14 LUFS. Edited in Adobe Premiere Pro, captions animated in After Effects. Sample edit, made from a Creative Commons podcast.

For every new portfolio item, end the description with a "Tools:" line, for example "Tools: Premiere Pro, After Effects, CapCut, ElevenLabs". Use titles in the format "Format | Platform | Result".

Checklist to rerun every 2 weeks

1. Pull the newest 300–500 jobs in your niche.
2. Tools: count tool names. Add any new tool you can deliver to your skills, overview and portfolio.
3. Problem: is your chosen problem still posted every week by different US and foreign clients? If not, pick the next most common one.
4. Line 1: does it still say who you help and the result, in clients' words?
5. Line 2: replace it with your best real proof (Upwork reviews, then numbers, then client names you may share).
6. Responsibility: does the overview say what you manage, own and coordinate?
7. Rankings: check your position in the same searches as last time and compare.
